

Dr. Linda Sharpe-Taylor received her undergraduate education at Case Western Reserve University, a Master's Degree in Community Psychology from Cleveland State, and her Doctorate in Clinical Psychology from the University of Missouri-St. Louis. She serves as a consultant to government agencies, community-based prevention programs and services. She has developed programs and services that address a variety of issues that include peer helping programs, adolescent wellness, school violence, gender-specific programming, community building and risk reduction. In her work in public and private agencies in the greater St. Louis Region, her expertise has been widely sought. Always interested in new opportunities to grow, Dr. Sharpe-Taylor has added to her skills with the addition of Appreciative Inquiry, a method of transformative change for all types of businesses and organizations. Throughout her career, Dr. Sharpe-Taylor has done program evaluation either as internal monitoring of a program she has developed or as an independent evaluator of other programs. She understands program evaluation from the point of view of a project director and as an outside independent evaluator. She is a new member of the American Evaluation Association.
